Education and Learning

Smt. Jagruti Pandya

Assistant Professor

Swami Sahajanand College of Commerce & Management

Education and learning are important to achieve the social and economic goals and quality of life. But the issue is whether the two words are synonyms? A person who is educated is also learned? Education is counted by a student's academic success and education should act like an enabler and enhancer in the process of learning. Education may be confined to classroom but the process of learning has no boundaries. One can learn a lot from surroundings. Just we need to give importance to the happenings in and around us. The source of learning may be seniors, peers, juniors and even strangers. Just the urge to learn should be there. True learning can take place if we keep aside our ego and we are ready to acknowledge, appreciate, admire and adore others. Creativity and activity are keys to the process of learning by doing. The real life situations can be the greatest learning experiences.

Learning aims at acquiring knowledge and skills. Hence, practice orientated approach is required for developmental education and learning assistance. Again, learning must be reflective i.e. there should be cognitive or affective change in the behavior of the student. Patience and practice are the other vital pillars of learning. However, if one tries to learn everything than there are chances of becoming jack of all and master of none. Hence it is required that one should strive to know what gives satisfaction. Of course one may strongly argue for money but that may be the 'end' but not the 'means'. Identifying a meaningful 'means' is crucial, to reach the desired outcome. Here, lies the importance of outcome based learning. It helps in molding our habits, behavior and outlook to observe the world. If one can identify, realistically what should be the means to achieve the goal of being happy in life, there are every possible chances of achieving it. So clarity of thought is important. Hard-work leads to success. We have been hearing this phrase since childhood and nobody on earth

*The Sun with its violet ray, Peeping through the
showers in the sky,
Appears to me an angel,
Smiling with me neigh!!
Oh! What a scene
How much loveliness it sows.
Oh! My mind before it bows.
But Alas!
The ghost – the darkness
Engulf the show
And the dream like loveliness
Reduced to low!*

*As every flower fades,
as every youth departs,
So is life at every stage.*

*You never know who you meet,
You never know who you greet,
So is life at every stage.*

*From a small bud to a blooming plant,
Rising beyond thunders and standing upright.*

*Every withering leaf will teach you,
That, people too must wilt, fall in order to bloom
Life's challenges may summon you anytime,
So be ready to face it with grace rise and shine.*

Life

*Life takes us on a very long ride, where we all have to strive.
Various opportunities we meet where we try our best to beat others.
Life gives us little time and we have lots to do,
Sometimes we succeed and sometimes we fail to do.*

In this journey of life we meet people, but fail to recognize who's right and who's wrong. Who is meant to stay and who to leave. Life gives us the best of roles, so we should try achieving our goals. Any challenges we do sustain and only the Almighty gives us the gains.

Play your Part in Conservation of Water

TEACHERS' WALL

In his poetic masterpiece "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner", the English poet, Samuel Taylor Coleridge, described the agony of a sailor who is surrounded by water but cannot drink it. It is ironic that in his distress he exclaims, "water, water everywhere, Not any drop to drink." This deeply distressed expression of Coleridge is a reflection of today's human predicament. Water is vital for human survival but man cannot create water to sustain himself, yet he mindlessly wastes this most essential natural resource. There are vast reservoirs of freshwater in the polar ice-caps but they are melting at an alarming rate and is draining off into the oceans. This is increasing the sea levels but this situation is causing a significant shortage of drinking water. Environmentalists are raising an alarm over the situation. Experts are predicting that a Third World War might break out over this issue - shortage of potable, drinking water. Scientists across the world have repeatedly emphasised that global warming accelerated by human action is the greatest danger of our times. Water is indispensable but global shortages are increasing at such an alarming rate, that it is making the wastage of water a grave cause of concern. While governments all over are trying to resolve the water issues of their nations, it is also pertinent that as responsible citizens, each of us should become involved in the initiative to conserve water. According to United Nations reports, water scarcity is already affecting every continent in the world. If each of us were to awaken to the responsibility of mindfully using water resources, he could contribute greatly to addressing the issue of water shortage. Charity begins at home, so each of us should resolve to rise to the occasion and do our bit by finding out how we can do something to reduce our own water footprint and help manage the need for water. Water is not just a source of physical existence but also an equally important source of spiritual nourishment. It teaches us to be a giver and fulfil our responsibility towards others. Everything in the world continuously conveys the message that we should give, without taking anything in return and discharge our duty in a selfless manner. According to the Quran, water is a beautiful creation of the creator.

The Quran says, “We have made every living thing out of water”. We have to conserve water as an act of worship, we have to regard it as a sacred duty imposed on each of us to continue to preserve life for future generations. We should adopt this culture, and live as givers, rather than as takers, otherwise the next generations will judge us as destroyers of the natural reservoir and contribute our mite in conserving water.

Did you see? His tender hands are loaded with tones of stones, Did you see? His delicate hands are making tea next to the bus stand, bringing you your ironed clothes, sweeping at your place and sitting at some corner of the road quietly, longing for some attention and love. His childhood ruined his hopes shattered, The tear in his eyes dissolved the smile of his face. But, did you notice? At an age where they should be receiving education which is crucial for their development, they are forced to work. About 17 million children are trapped in the clutches of exploitation. Neglected by the society, these innocent faces are struggling for their survival. We need to be aware of such problems and help such children.

A simple definition of leadership is the ability and willingness to take ownership of anything, combined with an intrinsic drive to do what is best for that event. However, for leadership to be effective, it must be on a solid foundation consisting of a clear mission, a vision for the future, a specific strategy, and a culture conducive to success.

Mission - is the reason that an organization exists. Having a clear sense of mission is crucial for guiding leadership decisions and choosing between alternatives.

Vision - is a conceptualization of a future, and hopefully better state towards which the leader navigates the organization.

Strategy - refers to the plans that the organization follows in order to be successful

The Importance of Leadership in Organizational Success and competitive, whereas tactics refer to the specific steps that the organization takes to achieve and implement the strategy.

Culture - is a crucial component that leaders must understand to achieve maximum effectiveness. The best leaders positively affect long-term organizational culture and values through self-modelling of behaviours, creating cultural expectations, and formally communicating cultural expectations.

In addition to cultivating a conducive environment that is on a strong foundation, effective leaders must exhibit specific skills and attributes to achieve the goals of the organization. These traits include excellent communication skills, empathy and emotional intelligence, team-building skills, etc. The most important tool that leaders possess is communication. Effective communication ensures understanding and is not simply sending out messages or emails. Communication is a two-way interaction, and the ability for the leader to listen is critical. Empathy and emotional intelligence are key leadership traits that are frequently overlooked. Leaders are regularly called upon to deal with challenging and, at times, unpleasant situations. Having a high degree of emotional intelligence will enable the leader to deal with such situations effectively and objectively while not avoiding the underlying issues.

Team-Building Skills - It is the responsibility of the leader not to dominate the conversation and to ensure that teams feel safe speaking up. The effective leader trusts the team members, challenges them, and lets them handle difficult situations. What is required is a commitment to fairness, transparency, and doing the right thing.

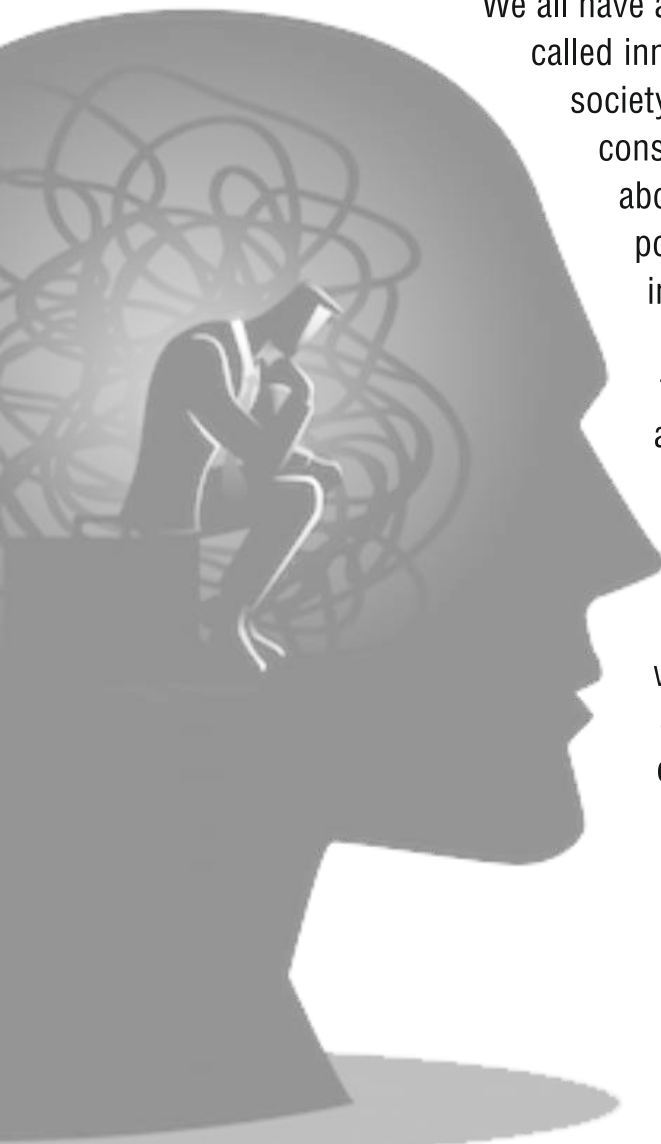

Inner Voice

Mr. Manish Dholakia

Assistant Professor
Swami Sahajanand College of Computer Science

We all have a voice that comes from within us and guides us. It is called inner voice. No matter how trivial we actually are in the society, we have a deep inner voice. It instills in us consciousness, sensitivity and feelings. We begin to think about our relationships, our social status and market position only when the inner voice informs us. It infuses in us the spirit to live with dignity and self-pride. It is the driving force that helps us sail through tough time. No amount of motivation is sufficient to awaken the dead inner voice. It is self-realisation that breaks the dormancy of asleep inner voice. Extraordinary men are no different from you and me. The only difference is that they trust their inner voice and we don't. Enlightenment comes when our inner voice merges with boundless faith. Spending time with ourselves can help us listen to our muted inner voice.
